NEW COLORED M. E. CONGREGATION TO BE FORMED HERE

The Methodist Episcopal Church, under the impact of the Centenary movement with its widening vision and increased resources, has accepted as a part of its responsibility, the duty of aiding in meeting the religious needs of the colored people who have come from the South and elsewhere and located in the North, particularly in industrial centers.

To accomplish this Bishop William F. McDowell, resident bishop of the Washington Area about 12 months ago created a new district extending from West Virginia to New York, including all Western Pennsylvania and appointed Rev. J. M. Naylor, formerly pastor of the Sharp Street Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church of Baltimore, as superintendent.

The purpose more particularly is to assist in providing suitable accommodation for worship and community activity centers where needed and to furnish the best trained leadership available with which to supplement the religious forces already at work; in order that these newcomers might be adjusted to their new surroundings properly and advanced in all that makes for strong, constructive Christian citizenship.

During these months prosperous missions have been established and valuable property acquired at McKeesport, Verona, Woodlawn and Beaver Falls, besides opening work at Pittsburg and Johnstown.

After a careful survey of the Connellsville and vicinity it has been decided to begin work here at 126 North Eighth street, where the initial services will be held Sunday at 11 A. M., 3 and 8 P. M., and thereafter until more suitable quarters can be secured.

The pastor, Rev. Stephen Fields, a graduate of Gammon Theological Seminary, Atlanta, Ga., will speak morning and evening and at 3 P. M. the district superintendent, Dr. Naylor, will speak.

A cordial invitation is extended the public.

SIDEWALKS ON WEST SIDE

A number of residents along West Crawford avenue on the West Side hill are laying sidewalks in front of their properties. The concrete walks are adding much to the appearance of the street and are welcomed by the pedestrians who may now travel in safety, without danger of being run down by automobiles.

A half dozen propertyholders have completed or are completing this work. An effort will be made to have more put down. Sidewalks along Crawford avenue in the hill top section are few and practically all pedestrians walk in the street. THOMPSON MINER SAYS GUARDS BEAT AND KICKED HIM

Fired at Him Also, Declares Steve Stanya, Testifying in Court.

ESCAPED BY RUNNING

Harry Applegate, Deputy at Same Plant, Is Found Guilty on Charge of Assault and Battery Brought in Behalf of Homer Greenwood, Worker.

Charges that he was beaten by deputies at Thompson No. 1 coke works the night of April 5 were made by Steve Stanya, a miner at Thompson, in testimony in court in Uniontown this morning. Stanya testified that he was decoyed out of his home during the night and taken to a spot near the plant where he was beaten and fired upon by the officers. He said he escaped, took refuge in a house and finally escaped the pursuers by hanging from the roof of the house.

Steve said that on the night in question Arthur Nelms told him the superintendent wanted him to go to the home of John Polaca and tell him to pull coke. He said the reason he was asked to do this was that Polaca would believe him and get that he had been asked to perform this service because he and Polaca were good friends. It was explained that it had been decided at a meeting of miners to remove what coke was in the ovens.

He said that along the road near the plant he was seized by two officers, William Webster and John Bazarik, who jabbed him with revolvers and attempted to force him to go to work. He said when he resisted their efforts they beat and kicked him until he finally broke away. They fired at him, as he ran, he said.

Harry Applegate, deputy at the Thompson No. 1 mine near Republic, was convicted by a jury yesterday afternoon before Judge J. Q. Van Swearingen on charges of assault and battery and aggravated assault and battery upon Homer Greenwood, May 20, last, and Harry Smith, another deputy, and Thomas H. Tudor, superintendent at the plant, were acquitted on the same indictment.

Greenwood testified that he was walking along the highway between Thompson and Republic when Applegate stopped him and demanded that to turn back toward Thompson. He said he told the deputy that he lived at Republic and was on his way home and was attempting to circle around him when Applegate struck him over the head with a night stick, knocking him to the ground and inflicting an ugly wound upon his head. Regaining himself a few seconds later he said he escaped from the officer.

This evening Dr. H. N. Cameron of Dawson, district superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal Church, will speak.

Last night's session was featured by a splendid address on "Move Up Front," by Rev. Dr. H. D. Whitfield of Crafton. Dr. Whitfield declared that the slogan "Move Up Front," borrowed from a street car, was a fitting one for Christian service. He told of the experiences of Bible heroes to show attainments of those who constantly forged ahead. He insisted that the accidental must be thrilled with the greatness of his life in order to obtain success and he declared the church, which is the chief mission, is to preach salvation and forget non-essential ideas.

"It doesn't make much difference whether swell people belong to your church or not," he said. "You also need those who are not swell and your church will not measure up to its opportunities until it places Salvation above pedigree."

Following the regular program a social hour, in charge of Miss Zoa Lemon's was held by the local league.

Rev. N. B. Tannehill, Mrs. Williams and Rev. Joseph Zimmerman were the speakers this afternoon. Rev. Zimmerman spoke on "Life Work." Rev. N. H. NEW ROAD TO UNIONTOWN WILL BE READY AUG. 1

The new road between Uniontown and Connellsville will be opened about August 1, according to present indications. Contractor W. H. Wilkey has been pushing the work as rapidly as possible but the big job can not be completed short of seven weeks. The construction force is now down to the concrete laying, the final stage of the work.

When the new road is completed the Uniontown-Connellsville trip will be robbed of much of its danger on the present brick road via Bute. Most of the dangerous sharp curves will be missing and many of the hills will be eliminated. The distance itself will be cut one full mile, running about 12 miles on the new route to 13 via Bute. This means a saving of at least five minutes' running time. The Connellsville end of the road, from the Gaddis farm to Trotter, has been in use for several months.

INTENSIVE CAMPAIGN OF RELIGIOUS WORK PLAN OF S. S. ASSN.

That Fayette county religious workers are preparing for an intensive campaign of religious education, not only within the church circle, but indirectly in public school and community life, is evidenced by the theme running through the program of the 26th annual convention of the Fayette County Sunday School Association which convened yesterday morning at the Central Christian Church, Uniontown.

There are three things county workers seem anxious to do at the suggestion of Dr. M. Hadwin Fisher, Philadelphia, who spoke at the conference yesterday afternoon:

1. An effort will be made to interest the public school authorities in a religious education program. Under this program all the pupils of the school would be required to gain credits by one hour's Bible study each week. This study would be under the direction of the various churches and the denominational faith of no one would be interfered with.

Each pupil, Protestant, Catholic or Jewish, would go to the teachers of his own church for the study toward the passing Bible credits in the school.

2. The organization of Vocational Bible schools is under contemplation. In this work either the individual churches or a community organization would have the children under their care for three or four weeks during the summer vacation period. Teachers for the work would be selected with care and the children would receive Bible instruction, would be given exercises in play and general useful instruction.

3. The county workers are about ready to organize what are known as the Week Day schools. These schools are for the specialized training of teachers and leaders in church work. Under present plans there will be a central school in Uniontown or Connellsville and branch schools all over the county. The study would come in the evenings and the instruction would be the same in all the schools. The Sunday school teachers and church workers would be trained, not only in Bible history but in methods for the instruction of the knowledge gained. The whole county will be combed for material for the instructors in these schools.

NO ARRESTS YET MADE IN SCHEPES SHOOTING CASE

Police Believe Banks Woman Holds Key to Reason for Murder Attempt.

VICTIM IS RESTING EASY

Italian Bank Clerk Spends Fairly Good Night at Hospital, Little Change in Condition Reported Today; Memories of Witnesses Still Clouded.

No arrests have as yet been made in the shooting Wednesday night when Charles Schepes, Italian clerk in the foreign department of the First National Bank, was shot five times in the restaurant conducted by Angelo Cambria in Water street. Schepes is in the Cottage State Hospital where he is reported to be resting about the same. Inquiry as to how he passed the night was answered by "fairly good."

There are many different theories being advanced as to the cause of the shooting but the police are about convinced that if Lillian Danks could be apprehended she could be made to throw some light on the case. It is believed she was seen on the road to Uniontown during the night following the shooting.

No word has yet been received from County Detective John J. Russell, Chief of Police Murphy said this morning. He said the county officer was notified immediately following the crime here. Although the chief was unable to locate Russell personally, he said, the Uniontown police were asked to get word to him.

The memories of the persons in the restaurant when the shooting took place are still very clouded and none seems able to recall distinctly just what the two strangers, one of whom is said to have fired the shots, looked like. A number of reports of a woman seen with a man in a gray suit have been made to the police, but the officers think the men were joined by the Danks woman and headed toward the countyseat.

Schepes maintains he does not know who his assailant was nor why the shooting was done. His condition is still very grave and there is said to be little hope for recovery although he has not yet taken a turn for the worse.

IRISH ELECTIONS OPEN; FIGHT FOR, AGAINST TREATY

By Associated Press.

DUBLIN, June 16.—The voters of Southern Ireland went to the polls today to elect an Irish parliament as provided under the treaty. Under the recent agreement between the factions favoring and opposing the treaty a coalition panel of candidates was presented to the people.

A number of independents, however, have entered the field in an attempt to overturn the panel on the treaty issue and it was on this phase of the struggle that interest centered at the polling places.

LONDON, June 16.—The draft of the new Irish constitution made public last night on the eve of the Irish elections gives, as the document itself states, force of law to the Anglo-Irish treaty and expressly declares that any provision of the constitution or any amendment thereto, or any law enacted under the constitution, which is in any respect repugnant to the treaty, shall be void and inoperative.

The constitution thus embodies connection with the British crown, as already established in the treaty, and generally places the relations between Ireland and the empire on the same basis as Canada and the other dominions.

The constitution requires every member of the Free State Parliament to subscribe faith and allegiance to the constitution and swear to be faithful to the King in virtue of the common citizenship of Ireland and Great Britain and Ireland's membership in the British commonwealth of nations.

"One Big Union" Is Voted Down by Labor Convention

By Associated Press.

CINCINNATI, June 16.—By the vote of every delegate, the American Federation of Labor convention here yesterday indorsed the nation-wide coal strike that since April 1 has kept 500,000 miners from work, and also indicated by a demonstration its approval of the threatened walkout of more than 1,000,000 railroad workers.

The demonstration was loud cheers from all parts of the big convention hall, when D. M. Jewell, president of the Railway Employes' Department of the federation, told the convention that the rail union chiefs would not interfere to stop a strike.

"It is believed," declared Mr. Jewell, "that the membership is prepared to meet the test, and if they do decide, their decisions will be complied with."

Big Majority Favors Strike

By Associated Press.

CINCINNATI, June 16.—An overwhelming majority in favor of a strike is being cast by members of 11 shop crafts and maintenance of way unions, said a formal statement issued here last night by the heads of the unions affected by recent decisions of the Railroad Labor Board, who added that the decision of the members would be complied with by them.

The combined membership of the unions affected totals 1,225,000 men.

"We would not feel the strike to be the only solution," said the statement, "if the attitude of management did not block all possibility of the other and better alternative."

The statement criticized wage cuts made by the Railroad Labor Board, declaring "it has so reduced standards that the strike becomes an act of self-preservation."

Harding Endorses Move for Greater Penn State College

STATE COLLEGE June 16—President Harding in a letter given out here today by President John M Thomas of the Pennsylvania State College expressed his surprise at the necessity of turning away 3 000 students a year from that institution because of the lack of adequate facilities He emphasized the value of land grant colleges in the public education system and wished success to those who are "undertaking to persuade the people of Pennsylvania to follow the example of every state west of them and to provide a state university worthy of the commonwealth In his letter to Dr Thomas, President Harding says

The land-grant colleges founded by Act of Congress signed by President Lincoln, and substantially assisted by annual grants of the federal government, have become an important element in the public education of the nation

My attention has been called to your endeavor to develop the Pennsylvania State College the land-grant college of the Keystone State into a state university worthy of that great commonwealth

This has been done already in 26 other states, including my own state of Ohio No state which has established a state university as part of its system of public schools would think of abandoning it

I wish you all success in your undertaking to persuade the people of Pennsylvania to follow the example of every state west of them and to provide a free institution of higher learning ample to meet the needs of the commonwealth

I have learned with surprise that it is necessary for one of our national colleges to refuse a thousand qualified students each year because of lack of facilities and I trust that your efforts to remedy this situation both by private gifts and public support may meet with success"

The inadequacy of the plant and equipment at State College to meet all demands and the plan to develop the college into a state university came to the attention of President Harding when Dr Thomas representatives of the Washington Alumni Club of Penn State and members of the student varsity quartet called at the White House on April 24 last

Dr Thomas presented the four student musicians as representing 3,200 other students now enrolled at the college and told the President that, had it not been necessary to turn away about an equal number of students in the past four years the present enrollment would be about 6 000

The plan for further development of Pennsylvania State College to which President Harding refers contemplates the raising of a fund of $2 000,000 for the erection of health and welfare buildings upon the campus The buildings for which there is immediate need are physical education buildings for men and for women a varsity hall, a Penn State union a hospital and residences for men and for women

An Epoch-Making Decision

Manufacturers Record.

The Supreme Court has sensed the inevitable. It has declared that labor unions can be sued and held in damages. The decision clarifies the atmosphere. The effort of the labor unions to place themselves outside of and beyond the law has been one of the greatest handicaps to their own work and has been largely responsible, also, for the intense and growing opposition throughout the nation to union domination.

More than 30 years ago Chauncey F. Black of Pennsylvania, then president of the National Association of Democratic Clubs, a leader of the Democratic party and one of the foremost lawyers in the country, took the ground that the only safety for labor and capital alike would be the incorporation of labor organizations under a national law which would give them the right to make contracts under which they could sue or be sued.

It is altogether possible that out of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Coronado coal case will come a movement to carry out the plan suggested by Mr. Black for the incorporation of labor unions. This newspaper is unalterably opposed to low wages, but it is equally unalterable in its opposition to any organization of labor or capital which would seek to be above the courts and thus above all legislation.

Certain great labor organizations have vast powers over the well-being of millions of citizens. They can interrupt, if not wholly stop, the transportation machinery. They have, on occasion, tied up the shipping industry. They have, lawlessly at times, attempted to freeze the nation out. The possession of power presupposes responsibility for its employment. What men cannot do singly to destroy property of another they ought not to be permitted to do in union, and on account of such union plead immunity. When men band themselves together for a given purpose, it is to be presumed that they are individually and collectively responsible for their acts. To plead such wide powers as the unions do and then seek to deny legal responsibility is not only cowardly but it contemplates a situation which society could not endure.

If the decision of the Supreme Court forces the situation, as we trust it will, we hope there will be enough backbone in Congress to insist that incorporation of labor unions under federal or state charters, giving them the right to sue and be sued, is essential; and that labor unions not so incorporated shall be illegal. The result would not only be to stabilize industry, since wanton strikes would not occur if the treasuries of the union were subject to payment for damages resulting, but benefits would also flow into the labor unions themselves in that they would be conducted with more fairness, regard for public opinion and general sobriety, and would also command some measure of respect, which is certainly not the case today.

Some lawyers in Washington are convinced that the Coronado decision is the most far-reaching delivered by the Supreme Court in many years. They contend that under it any manufacturer who is able to show damages could sustain a suit against the United Mine Workers of America for losses resulting from the present coal strike. Should this be true, the total damages would be so large in amount as to destroy the union as an organization. Under this view of the decision, it is clear that leaders of the coal strike are treading on dangerous ground. Yet the decision of the court seems to run back for support to the very beginnings of Anglo-Saxon law which always insisted that power and responsibility for its use cannot be divorced.

Humane Society's Work

Pittsburg Gazette Times

The noble activities of the Western Pennsylvania Humane Society are less insistently brought to public attention now than was the case a score and more years ago. In remote days when people visualized the society in the person of a short chunky, blue suited man whose pink-whiskered countenance was topped off with one of the last plug hats anyone dared to wear in this community—in those days the society was best known through the incessant efforts of Superintendent "Sam" O'Brien to protect horses, a big factor in workaday Pittsburg, from the cruelty of their drivers. With the virtual exclusion of horses from our streets it has appeared to most people there was little need for the Humane Society. But it is still an important influence in the community, as is disclosed by the report of the managers submitted at the 48th annual meeting of the organization. And the methods by which it achieves results are to be commended to all who strive for human betterment in any direction.

It is disclosed that in the year past 5,274 complaints of cruelty to animals were received and investigated. Eighteen were "not found," 132 were not substantiated, 1,527 were remedied without prosecution "by advice and warning," and there were 435 prosecutions. It is the 1,527 cases remedied by advice and warning that command attention as exemplifying the benefits accruing from a reasoned system of improving human conduct. Tactfulness must be outstanding in the character of the society's agents; there and an appropriate degree of sympathy and considerateness, allied to a capacity for instilling higher principles without seeming to instruct.

Thoughtless people express surprise that men and women should devote their energies and their money to work in behalf of dumb animals. Be set right by the managers, who say:

It should be realized that the permanent value of this humane society does not consist so much in the activities of its daily service essential as those are, as in the creation of a durable public sentiment favorable to a policy of humane treatment of all animals. These creatures mankind can no more live without than it can survive without food and water. Horses, mules, cows, cattle, sheep, hogs, dogs, poultry, cats and birds are our constant companions, contributors to our daily needs, but helpless to protect themselves from man's inhumanities.

To lessen these inhumanities, to awaken and develop the sentiment of kindness to the brute creation, to put fear of punishment into the hearts of the cruel, to instruct the young by every available means in the duty of justice to the lower orders of life, is the basic enabling work of the Western Pennsylvania Humane Society and in the doing of this is vital principle in the maintenance of good government) we unselfishly feel every tongue should encourage us and every hand should help us.

Be kind to animals and help the Humane Society in its splendid work of carrying the gospel of kindness throughout the community, stopping cruelty by precept where it can, by punishment where it must.

THE PURPOSE OF TRIAL.

I sometimes think June ought to be Grateful to April and to May
And every stormy winter day,
For had they failed their duty, she
Would find no bud upon a tree
And have no beauty to display—
For all that was, prepared the way
For every flower that mortals see.

And so, perhaps, it is with men.
Our trials and our griefs and tears,
So very soon forgotten when
The June-time of success appears.
Should own our gratitude—for they
Made possible our strength today.

Woman Surprises Her Friends

"After a spell of typhoid fever seven years ago I began to suffer from indigestion and gas in my stomach and colic attacks. This gradually became so bad that my doctor advised an operation for gall stones. A friend advised me to try Mayr's Wonderful Remedy which I did with splendid results. Shades of the Old Venetians

In the time of the Doges, Venice was the most colorful city of all the world. Along the Grand Canal the balconies of beautiful homes were canopied with rich cloths, often embroidered with gold.

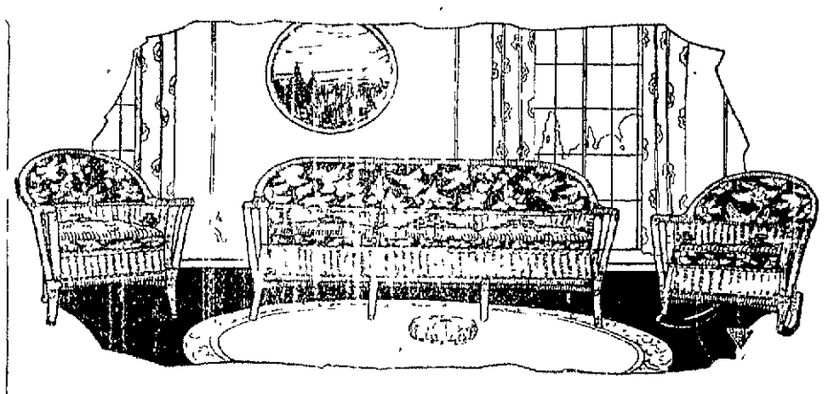

That was luxury. Yes, but even the old Venetians couldn't enjoy the comforts of a cool American porch, screened from the sun with Aerolux Porch Shades.

On stifling hot days Aerolux Porch Shades will shut out the sunlight, but let in plenty of light and air. They will transform your porch into a shady out-of-doors where you can eat, sleep or entertain Priced $3.40 and up.

Bert Williams

Bert Williams' Columbia Records are more than "moanful" songs of humor they are perfect character studies of this greatest of comedians himself that will live as long as people laugh. Listening to "You Can't Trust Nobody," you can just picture him standing before you, feet turned out, shoulders hunched forlornly, hands gesturing with his own indescribable "flop" while he lugubriously sings this song about a pathetic lady who was deceived in love.

"Not Lately" is one of the typical Williams' stories set to that mournful music that made them famous. Ah! me Old age creeps on apace! When this gentleman was little the ladies used to tuck him into bed, but "Not Lately"—and he can't even drown his woe, "No, a dollar now!"

"You Can't Trust Nobody" (Creamer & Layton). Bert Williams, Comedian, Orch Acc.

Marion Harris

"Some Sunny Day" finds Marion Harris all a-twitter. She's received a telegram from her home in Alabam' and it's all over but the travelling Shortly we'll see her climbing hurriedly into Upper 7 after having bribed the whole train-crew, from the engineer to the baggage-man, to make a record trip to the and down along the Swanee River.

The heroine of "Poor Little Me" is assuredly way out of luck She just can't seem to catch up with the procession, no matter how hard she tries. While the other girls are out with Tom, Dick, or Harry, "Poor Little Me" stays at home and studies the "God Bless Our Home" motto on the wall or plays "All Alone" on the Grafonola.

If it were raining soup, the poor girl would be out with a fork

Palestine Must Import Its Coal

Palestine is comparatively unimportant as a coal consuming country Industrial development requiring coal as fuel is so far comparatively negligible. Practically the only appreciable consumption of coal is by the government railways

There are no developed coal fields in the country and no indication at any exist for future development All coal is imported, about 95 per cent of the total coming from Great Britain and the remainder from Belgium and Germany.

The HOME GARDEN

What is Home without a Garden?

Summer Plant Feeding

Light applications of commercial fertilizer at the present season hoed in or raked in with the teeth attachment of a wheel hoe will do wonders in both the vegetable and the flower garden. Use bone meal, nitrate of soda and balanced fertilizers. Liberal dressings of pulverized sheep manure can be added as the manure is also excellent.

The last two have the advantage of adding to the texture of the soil. If the weather is dry it is a good plan to sprinkle after applying the fertilizer but it should be a liberal drenching to wash the fertilizer into the soil and render it readily available for the plants.

In applying commercial fertilizers which are usually powdered form sprinkle at a little distance from the stems of the plants at least one inch or so. Apply lightly. It is a mistake to put on the commercial fertilizer too liberally. The plants can use only a certain amount. Some of them if applied too strongly are likely to burn.

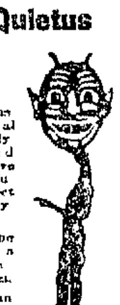

Lightly and often is the motto. Once every two weeks during the early growing season will be sufficient. Even this may not be needed and three weeks apart may do the business. The plants respond quickly and their condition will indicate when there is need for further application.

STORIES OF GREAT INDIANS

By Elmo Scott Watson

CHIEF RED JACKET, SAGE OF THE SENECAS

WHAT Demosthenes was to the Greeks and Cicero to the Romans Red Jacket was to the People of the Long House (the Iroquois Indians). He was a member of the important Wolf clan of the Seneca tribe and his Indian name of Sha-go-ye-wa-tha "He Who Causes Them to Keep Awake" referred to the most marked characteristic of his clan animal instead of the chief's oratorical powers.

During the Revolution Red Jacket tried to hold his people neutral, but being overruled by his tribe he enlisted under the British flag. His intelligence soon brought him to the notice of the English officers and one of them gave him a scarlet jacket.

Red Jacket was not a fighter. He was at his best in the council. "I am an orator. I was born an orator" was his boastful declaration. He was a ready and effective speaker. He had a tenacious memory, a quick wit, and a gift of biting sarcasm. He was especially hostile to the missionaries who came upon the Seneca reservation. "If they are not useful to the white people why do they send them to the Indians?" he said. "If they are useful to the whites why don't they keep them at home? Surely the white man are bad enough to need the labor of everyone who can make them better.

In 1831 a Seneca was placed on trial for having executed an Indian woman as a witch. Red Jacket spoke in his defense. "What? Do you denounce us as fools because we still believe what you believed two centuries ago? thundered the old chief. "Go to Salem! Look at the records of your own government and you will find that hundreds have been executed for the very crime which has brought down vengeance upon the warrior."

One day Red Jacket met a crowd of people on their way to witness a hanging. When asked why he, too did not attend the execution the chief replied "There are enough fools there now. The field of battle is the place to see men die."

Red Jacket constantly warned his people against the white man's ways. He had abundant reason for one of the white man's customs brought about his downfall. In his later years he became a drunkard and descended to such depths that in 1827 his people deprived him of the chiefship. Eventually the commissioner of Indian affairs restored him to his position but he did not long survive the humiliating experience. He died January 20 1830 and is buried in Buffalo, N Y

THE SOISSON.

"GYPSY BLOOD" the leading attraction today and tomorrow is a First National picture with Pola Negri the beautiful foreign star in the leading role. Much curiosity has been aroused as to the nationality of the widely discussed actress. A majority of people have been under the impression that she is French, but as a matter of fact she is Polish having been born, reared and educated in Poland. She has achieved her triumph particularly in Russia, where she was the reigning sensation as a ballet dancer and a favorite of royalty. She appeared on the concert stage as a violinist and won high laurels, particularly in Italy, Greece and Spain. For a while it appeared that she was destined to become one of history's marvels as the mistress of the bow, but then came the lure of the silver sheet and laying aside her violin she started on her sensational screen career and has developed into the leading film star of the continent heralded as the foremost exponent of the silent drama.

Portraying the part of the flirtatious gypsy cigaret girl called Carmencita, who attracted a Spanish dragoon to disgrace, who spurned his love for that of a toreador, and who paid the price of her follies, Pola Negri is an intensely fascinating and strikingly dramatic figure. She is another splendid proof of the fact that Poland has produced some of the world's most talented artists.

THE PARAMOUNT.

"A WESTERN DEMON" starring "Bill" Fairbanks, is the leading picture today and tomorrow at this theatre.

Ned Underwood, a red-blooded young American of Arizona, is called to New York to complete the purchase of the ranch which he has formerly been leasing. He makes his first visit to the big city.

Miss Rose Dale, who was born and raised in Gallup, Arizona has been attending a finishing school for girls in New York her parents having been dead for several years. At her father's death she became the sole owner of the B B ranch a large stock ranch in Arizona. Joe Dalton, foreman of the ranch, was resorting to underhanded methods to secure the ranch for himself, and thus defraud Miss Dale, who decides to immediately go back to the ranch and protect her interests. Just at this time while she is explaining the matter to an elderly lady friend, Ned Underwood strolls through the park when her friend's little girl falls off the bridge and is about to drown. Ned makes a daring leap from the top of the bridge and saves the child thus meeting Miss Dale, who admires him for his manly rescue.

THE ORPHEUM.

"OLD DAD," a First National picture with Mildred Harris in the stellar role is the feature picture today and tomorrow.

In this production, Miss Harris Chaplin deviates somewhat from her more serious roles of the past, and, according to preview reports, is more captivating than ever, revealing a surprising versatility. As Daphne Bretton, she has the role of a young girl who has missed one of life's greatest treasures — mother love — and who is left to the care of a preoccupied father, blinded to all else but the pursuit of the dollar. Lacking the influence of a devoted mother she develops into a capricious young woman whose disregard for certain of society's conventions at a fashionable boarding school make her very much misunderstood. She is expelled from school one evening when Richard Wiltoner a college boy is found in her room, in spite of the fact that the circumstances surrounding his presence there, are perfectly proper. Ostracized by her closest friends Daphne is taken to the Adirondacks by her father. There she meets Robert Kaire, a young millionaire of the fast set, who immediately plans to ensnare the beautiful Daphne. Failing to accomplish his purpose by illegitimate means, he finally proposes and the two elope. Daphne is heartbroken and thoroughly disillusioned however, when she later finds that she has married a bigamist. But her old dad and the young fellow of the boarding school escapade for whom Daphne still retains a strong liking come to the rescue in an unexpected fashion.

Hugh had followed them.

"Barbara, your mother wants you," he said, and the little girl turned toward the house. The stranger was ill at ease with Hugh and the latter knew it.

"It must be very exciting where you live."

"How?"

"Oh, fighting Indians and shooting deer and turkeys and buffalo. It must be great fun."

"Nobody does it for fun—it's mighty hard work."

"My uncle—your father—used to tell us about his wonderful adventures out there."

"He had no chance to tell me."

"But yours must have been more wonderful than his."

The boy gave a little grunt that was a survival of his Indian life, and turned to go back to the house.

"But all this, I suppose, is as strange to you."

"More."

Hugh was polite and apparently sincere in interest, but the lad was vaguely disturbed and he quickened his step. The porch was empty when they turned the corner of the house, but young Harry Dale came running down the steps, his honest face alight, and caught the little Kentuckian by the arm.

"Get ready for supper, Hugh—come on," cousin," he said, and led the stranger to his room and pointed to the clothes on the bed.

"Don't they fit?" he asked, smiling.

"I don't know—I don't know how to git into 'em."

Young Harry laughed joyously.

"Of course not. I wouldn't know how to put yours on either. You just wait," he cried, and disappeared to return quickly with an armful of clothes.

"Take off your war-dress," he said, "and I'll show you."

With heart warming to such kindness, and helpless against it, the lad obeyed like a child and was dressed like a child.

"Now, I've got to hurry," said Harry. "I'll come back for you. Just look at yourself," he called at the door.

And the stranger did look at the wonderful vision that a great mirror as tall as himself gave back. His eyes began to sting, and he rubbed them with the back of his hand and looked at the hand curiously. It was moist. He had seen tears in a woman's eyes, but he did not know that they could come to a man and he felt ashamed.

CHAPTER V

The boy stood at a window looking out into the gathering dusk. The neighing of horses, the lowing of cattle, the piping of roosting turkeys and motherly clutter of roosting hens, the weird songs of negroes, the sounds of busy preparation through the house and from the kitchen—all were sounds of peace and plenty, security and service. And over in his own wilds at that hour they were driving cows and horses into the stockade. They were cooking their rude supper in the open. A man had gone to each of the watch-towers. From the blackening woods came the curdling cry of a panther and the hooting of owls. Away on over the still westward wilds were the wigwams of squaws, papooses, braves, the red men—red in skin, in blood, in heart, and red with hate against the whites.

Perhaps they were circling a fire at that moment in a frenzied war-dance—perhaps the hooting at that moment from the woods around the fort was not the hooting of owls at all. There all was hardship—danger; here all was comfort and peace. If they could see him now! See his room, his fire, his bed, his clothes! They had told

"Here He Is, Mother."

Him to come, and yet he felt now the shame of desertion. He had come, but he would not stay long away. The door opened, he turned, and Harry Dale came eagerly in.

"Mother wants to see you."

The two boys paused in the hall and Harry pointed to a pair of crossed rapiers over the mantelpiece.

"Those were your father's," he said; "he was a wonderful fencer."

The lad shook his head in ignorance and Harry smiled.

"I'll show you tomorrow."

At a door in the other ell Harry knocked gently, and a voice that was low and sweet but vibrant with imperiousness called:

"Come in!"

"Here he is, mother."

The lad stepped into warmth, subtle fragrance and many candle lights. The great lady was just rising from a chair in front of her mirror, brocaded, powdered and starred with jewels. So brilliant a vision almost stunned the little stranger and it took an effort for him to lift his eyes to hers.

"Why, this is not the lad you told me of," she said. "Come here! Both of you." They came and the lady scrutinized them comparingly.

"Actually you look alike—and, Harry, you have no advantage, even if you are my own son. I am glad you are here," she said with sudden soberness, and smiling tenderly she put both hands on his shoulders, drew him to her and kissed him, and again he felt in his eyes that curious sting.

"Come, Harry!" With a gallant bow Harry offered his left arm, and gathering the little Kentuckian with her left, the regal lady swept out. In the reception-room she kept the boy by her side. Every man who approached bowed, and soon the lad was bowing, too. Barbara almost cried out her astonishment and pleasure when she saw what a handsome figure he made in his new clothing, and all her little friends were soon darting surreptitious glances at him, and many whispered questions and pleasing comments were passed around. Then General Willoughby bowed with noble dignity before Mrs. Dale, and the two led the way to the dining room.

"Harry," she said, "you and Barbara take care of your cousin."

And almost without knowing it the young Kentuckian bowed to Barbara, who courtesied and took his arm. The table flashed with silver and crystal on snowy-white damask and was brilliant with colored candles. The little woodsman saw the men draw back chairs for the ladies, and he drew back Barbara's before Hugh, on the other side of her, could forestall him. The boy had never seen so many and so mysterious-looking things to eat and drink. One glass of wine he took, and the quick dizziness that assailed him frightened him, and he did not touch it again. Beyond Barbara, Hugh leaned forward and lifted his glass to him. He shook his head and Hugh flushed—

"Our Kentucky cousin is not very polite—he is something of a barbarian—naturally."

"He doesn't understand," said Barbara quickly, who had noted the incident, and she turned to her cousin.

"Papa says you are going to live with us and you are going to study with Harry under Mr. Brockton."

"Our tutor," explained Harry; "there he is across there. He is an Englishman."

"Tutor?" questioned the boy.

"School-teacher," laughed Harry.

"Oh!"

"Haven't you any school-teachers at home?"

"No, I learned to read and write a little from Dave and Lyddy."

And then he had to tell who they were, and he went on to tell them about Mother Sanders and Honor and Bud and Jack and Polly Conrad and Lydia and Dave, and all the frontier folk, and the life they led, and the Indian fights, which thrilled Barbara and Harry, and forced even Hugh to listen—though once he laughed incredulously, and in a way that of a sudden shut the boy's lips tight and made Barbara color and Harry look grave. Hugh then turned to his wine and began soon to look more flushed and sulky. Shortly after the ladies left, Hugh followed them, and Harry and the Kentuckian moved toward the head of the table where the men had gathered around Colonel Dale.

"Yes," said General Willoughby, "it looks as though it might come."

"With due deference to Mr. Brockton," said Colonel Dale, "it looks as though his country would force us to some action."

They were talking about impending war. Far away as his wilds were, the boy had heard some talk of war in them, and he listened greedily to the quick fire of question and argument directed to the Englishman, who held his own with such sturdiness that Colonel Dale, fearing the heat might become too great, laughed and skillfully shifted the theme. Through hall and doorways came now merry sounds of fiddle and banjo.

Near a doorway between parlor and hall sat the fiddlers three. Gallant bows and dainty courtesyings and nimble feet were tripping measures quite new to the backwoodsman. Barbara nodded, smiled and after the dance ran up to ask him to take part, but he shook his head. Hugh had looked at him as from a superior height, and the boy noticed him frowning while Barbara was challenging him to dance. The next dance cleared his face and set his feet to keeping time, for the square dance had, of course, reached the wilds.

"I know that," he said to Harry, who told Barbara, and the little girl went up to him again, and this time, flushing, he took place with her on the floor. Hugh came up.

"Cousin Barbara, this is our dance, I believe," he said a little thickly.

The girl took him aside and Hugh went surlily away. Harry saw the incident and he looked after Hugh, frowning. The backwoodsman conducted himself very well. He was lithe and graceful and at first very dignified, but as he grew in confidence he began to execute steps that were new to that polite land and rather boisterous, but Barbara looked pleased and all onlookers seemed greatly amused—all except Hugh. And when the old fiddler sang out sonorously:

"Gentleman to right — cheat an' swing!" the boy cheated outrageously, cheated all but his little partner, to whom each time he turned with open loyalty, and Hugh was openly sneering now and genuinely angry.

"You shall have the last dance," whispered Barbara, "the Virginia reel."

"I know that dance," said the boy.

And when that dance came and the dancers were drawn in two lines, the boy, who was third from the end, heard Harry's low voice behind him:

"He is my cousin and my guest, and you will answer to me."

The lad wheeled, saw Harry with Hugh, left his place, and went to them. He spoke to Harry, but he looked at Hugh with a sword-flash in each black eye:

"I don't want nobody to take up for me."

Again he wheeled and was in his place, but Barbara saw and looked troubled, and so did Colonel Dale. He went over to the two boys and put his arm around Hugh's shoulder.

"Tut, tut, my boys," he said, with pleasant firmness, and led Hugh away, and when General Willoughby would have followed, the colonel nodded him back with a smile, and Hugh was seen no more that night. The guests left with gayety, smiles and laughter, and every one gave the stranger a kindly goodby. Again Harry went with him to his room and the lad stopped under the crossed swords.

"You fight with 'em? I want to learn how to use them."

Harry looked at him searchingly, but the boy's face gave a hint of no more purpose than when he first asked the same question.

"All right," said Harry.

From Great Imaginations.

"The four greatest inventions of an earlier period were all made without the modern aids to scientific discovery, but by men gifted with a disciplined imagination," said Dr. Frederick L. Hoffman of Newark, N. J., vice-president of the American association for the Advancement of Science, in his address as chairman of the section on economic and social science at the association's Toronto meeting. He went on: "Printing, gunpowder, steam and compass did more to change the face of the world and the fortunes of mankind than electricity, wireless telegraphy, motion pictures and the graphophone."

Owns 17,000,000 Sheep!

Here's a man who owns 17,000,000 head of sheep. He is David Clark, now touring Canada. His live stock is scattered about his many ranches in Australia, where he is known as "the sheep king." This year he expects to ship 75,000 bales of wool to market.

"Do you go in for cattle raising, too?" Clark is asked.

"Not to any extent," says he. "I have only 14,000 head of cattle."

Clark has achieved real success—close to the soil.

"The things we do in the cities are interesting, but not fundamentally important. Few city men live an worthwhile lives as I look, the Pioneer farmer in Knut Hamsun's "Growth of the Soil."

Encouraging a Bard.

"I can't use this poem of yours," said the editor of the Chippewaville Chelou.

"Why not?" asked the disappointed village poet.

"Well—er—I haven't room for it. But I'll tell you what I'll do, as long as you handed in a year's subscription with your manuscript, I'll put a little notice in our personal column stating that you have written some lines in which you show a firm grasp of spelling and punctuation."

Dearth of Coke Reported In Open Market, Despite Steady Production Gains

Cons derable Part Absorbed by Regular Contracts, Some by Private Arrangement.

HEAVY LATENT DEMAND

Furnaces Unwilling Few Weeks Ago to Pay Asking Price Now Would Meet Market Quotations If Regular Supply Could Be Had; Price $7.50.

Special to The Weekly Courier.

PITTSBURG, June 14.—Despite the continued gains in coke production in the Connellsville and Lower Connellsville regions the quantity of coke offered in the open market does not increase enough to make anything like a regular or open trading market. The condition is simply that of a little coke being found here and there nothing like a regular supply that can be traded in.

Production of merchant coke has now risen to a rate of 60 000 tons or more a month, according to the weekly reports of The Courier, but the tonnage passing through the open market is only a relatively small fraction of this No small part of the merchant production is going out on regular contracts, made before the strike started, while other coke is no doubt settled between producer and consumer by private arrangement, there being a sort of contract or understanding that a supply be furnished without the price being rigidly fixed

The open inquiry in the market for furnace coke is relatively small, while the latent demand is very heavy Supplies are so limited that prospective buyers are indisposed to put out regular inquiries, but are rather watching the situation for chances to pick up lots here and there In April the common understanding was that furnaces in general were quite unwilling to pay anything like the price that would be asked for coke while now the situation is somewhat different Not a few furnaces, no doubt, maintain their former position, but it is believed that quite a number would be willing to pay what is now considered the market, if they could thereby obtain a regular supply, while to pick up odd lots does not do much towards putting a furnace in operation

In foundry coke there remains but a limited inquiry in the open market, but the total amount of foundry coke changing hands from week to week is much larger than would be represented by the open market inquiry, for a considerable part of the foundry coke production is passing from producers to customers without any competition, settlement prices being simply agreed to from time to time

On the basis of the limited number of transactions in the market, with some aid from the bids and offers it is understood would be made by consumers and producers, the market seems to be quotable substantially as follows, about 25 cents higher than a week ago:

Spot furnace	$7 00@$7 50
Spot foundry	$7 50@$7 75

Report has it that a blast furnace in Western Pennsylvania has made a contract for West Virginia by-product coke that will cost $10 or more delivered. The price itself is regarded as well above the quotable Connellsville market, the difference being that by paying the price the furnace secured a supply while by paying the Connellsville price one merely gets a few carloads at a time if they chance to be available

The Connellsville coal market is a trifle higher than a week ago, but not as high as last Saturday, this week having shown a slight softening tendency, perhaps due to the withdrawal of two or three important buyers who buy until the market stiffens and then withdraw until prices get down to their liking. For Connellsville steam coal the market now seems to be quotable at a range of 25 cents, according to circumstances, from $3 75 to $4.00 By-product coal is not quotable at all

The pig iron market continues stagnant and probably on the whole does no present as strong a front as a week ago The continued apathy of buyers is beginning to be noticed, as there is scarcely any inquiry, and there are rumors of some re-sales being made at less than what is considered the regular or quotable market, which remains as follows.

Bessemer	$25 00
Basic	$25 00
Foundry	$24 00

These prices are f o b Valley furnaces, freight to Pittsburg being $1 96 until July 1 when the 10 per cent reduction should go into effect

The Lake Superior iron ore market for the 1922 season has at last opened with prices down 50 cents from the 1921 schedule and $1 50 from the 1910 level

Women Men Admire.

Men admire a pretty face, a good figure, but more than all a buoyant disposition and the charm of happy content There is no question but what a light-hearted woman is the joy of a man's life but no woman can be happy and joyful when dragged down by the ailments that so often develop as backaches, backache, nervousness and "the blues"

Railroad Labor Board Cannot Be Enjoined by Court

Contending that the Railroad Labor Board is an arm of the government analogous to the President or committees of Congress Blackburn Esterline, special assistant attorney general of the United States concluded arguments in the Court of Appeals a few days ago in the Pennsylvania test case by declaring that the board could not be sued or enjoined

He pointed out that the injunction issued by the Circuit Court restraining the board from issuing a decision condemning the Pennsylvania stated that the board's powers were only advisory He therefore declared advisory powers could not be enjoined, any more than the President could be enjoined from submitting a message to Congress or a congressional committee from reporting its recommendations

Judge Baker sitting with Judges Alschuler and Evans, indicated however that he did not consider that question involved

The fundamental question of this case is whether the board acted within its jurisdiction and in turn, if it did, whether the power under which it acted was constitutional,' said Judge Baker

The Pennsylvania, through its attorneys T J Scofield and J B Heiserman contended that the contemplated decision which the board was enjoined from issuing was without the board's jurisdiction The case arose out of an order to hold certain conferences with employes to select representatives for the negotiation of shop rules

OWES MUCH TO JOHN MUIR

Famous Naturalist Tells of Determining Influence at the Outset of His Career.

Enos A Mills, the nature guide and author, who through his books on the wild life of the Rockies has done more than any other man in the West to bring nature and human kind together, tells what was the determining influence of his career This was a chance meeting with John Muir Mr Mills, then a frail nineteen year old boy, whose poor health had led him to live much in the open was wandering one day over the hot sand hills of a beach near San Francisco.

'I had picked up a strange sort of weed he says and was puzzling about it Always it was my desire to ask questions about the things of the outdoors which I did not understand I saw an old man approaching He looked kindly and intelligent, and I asked him about the weed He told me all about it in language which fascinated me In turn, he began to question me

"We walked back to San Francisco together over the sand dunes and he asked me more questions about myself and my work and ambitions and advised me to study nature at every opportunity and to learn to write and speak of what I saw The stranger was John Muir His advice gave me something definite to work toward

'I owe everything to him If it hadn't been for him I would have been a mere gypsy. He told me to systematize my knowledge and that then I would be able to write —The Book Leaf

Husband—Because a thief could easily snatch them and get away

Wife—Well if the husbands of other women don't give them any more to put in their purses than you give me to put in mine the thief would starve to death
